reaching Misery at Lunch Time that was Allayed by a Corpulent Fisherman with a Basket-The Philosophy of Fishing.

The Schuyler, that goes fishing, left her pler at 8:20 A. M. on a sultry morning, but the agony of departure began some time before the tart. The pilot, a man of cynical temperament, had a gleeful time. He was seen to smile as early as 8 o'clock, when he seized the wire and opened the whistle until it reared like a maddened bull. The effect was instantaneous. Pincid Germans waddling along with beaming faces suddenly became violently red in the face. and made anasmodic efforts to run, while their wives began an accompaniment in a minor key, to the effect that they always said they would be late. Small boys with large lunch baskets, that afterward proved to be meagre when compared with their appetites, stumbled and scrambled along with nervous energy; and long men under broad-brimmed hats raced with short men in voluminous trousers for the boat. After half an hour of the pilot's pleasant-

It was a motiey throng. A few of the alleged fishermen were dressed in overalls and jackets. few in blue shirts and big hats, and some in blouses; but the majority, moved by a singular unanimity, chose such appropriate costumes as lavender trousers, long black Prince Albert coats, stiff black Derby hats, and white linen. or complete suits of dark cheviot and white iigh hats, also carrying canes. The boat was well out of the river and bowling down the bay when a gentleman walked briskly forward. He had a clean-shaven face and a large mouth. "Good evening," he velled.

As it was early morning, the alleged fishermen looked around in surprise. The man struck a theatrical attitude and said with clear enunciation: "Gents! I announce with great leasure that the concert is about to begin. Mimic songs, mot-toe songs, sent-i-ment-al songs, Hi-ber-nian songs, I-rish songs, and ne-gro songs. I should blush to prevaricate. What rose is born to blush unseen? Neg-roes. Not this evening! The comet concert of contented coons is about to begin."

He then burst into a smile, said, "Oh, you!"

with a tender gesture to the stewardess, and strutted aft, where he proceeded to do the cor-net concert all by himself, barring the so-called assistance of a mournful man who produced pleasing effects on a melodeon.

The pilot, having had his little joke, settled

"Oh you're quite welcome," he said, hospitably.

The greatly obliged to you."

The remark was somewhat muddled by the reaction after the first swallow of pickle, sausage, and bread, but the thanks were heartfelt and sincere. The corpulent party smiled benignly, and, after bestowing another pickle, produced the bottle of prunes. His wife was there, behind a huge sunshade, as were his daughter, her young man, an ambiguous relative just learning to fish, and a merry little golden-haired girl of 8 or 10 years. The ambiguous relative just learning to fish, and a merry little golden-haired girl of 8 or 10 years. The ambiguous relative was young but enthusiastic. The first thing he did was to bait his hook with enough clam to satiate haif the fish from here to Peru, and then throw the whole thing violently overboard. He had neglected to secure the land end of his line. When the lonesomeness of this mode "fishing was explained to him if followed to e. cess he carefully ited a but the said of his line. To this the host strongly objected, and the matter was finally adjusted by sending the ambiguous relative tweaty feet down the rail, where he promptly entangled his line with four others and inflicted acute anguish in the dome of a neighboring angler's trousers by the neat insertion of one of his hooks. He was enjoying himself hugely.

insertion of one of his hoods. He was enjoying himself hugely.

The fishing, generally speaking, however, was not productive of happy results, for the anglers fished for a weary time in the bhazing sun with scarcely a fish among a dozen of them, and then it was usually a diminutive porgic. After an hour or so of this sort of thing the Captain came to the not unnatural conclusion that it was not a good place to fish, and accordingly weighted anchor and selfled on another spot. There it was only a triffe better, but the men fished with greater zeal than ever, and howled in chorus whenever a fish was caught.

"It's rather warm work, and I find I'm becoming fatigued," repaired the stoat gentleman, whose latest archievement was the production of some bottled liquid in honor of the narrow escape the ambiguous had from falling overboard while trying to climb up an awning post. "I can't understand the facilitation that holds these men so firmly, unless it is the chance theory. See, that girl there has haif a post. The slow, methodical throbbing of the engine had a soctling effect, and the stout gentleman began to less outline and grow dim. After a while nothing seemed to exist except in an indistinct way and a little later the world was

TROLLING FOR BLUEFISH.

Thousands Have Had. Reported for The Sus by a Worth Street Entry Clerk. At the beginning of a fortnight's vacation determined on getting all the fresh air possible, and thus in a degree compensating for the confinement which I had undergone for a year behind a six-by-three desk. The first three days I spent at Coney Island, and regaled myself with the delicious ocean breezes, and at intervals with a spoonful of beer, for which I was charged five cents. I had already began to feel the good effects of these short trips, and I presanted a different appearance from the pale looking clerk of a few days before.

It was about this time that an enemy in disguise told me that lought to go bluefishing. He pictured to me a beautiful yacht, manned by a trusty sailor, and sent along by a spanking breeze over the blue waters of the Atlantic. I listened to his story and concluded to go. It happened that he knew of a party of four gen-tlemen who were to go in a few days, and I was introduced and invited to go with them. They were to start from Canarsic, Long Island, and I was told to meet them on the pier at 6 in the morning. To do this I would have to start from was told to meet them on the pier at 6 in the morning. To do this I would have to start from home at 2 o'clock, for I live at Union Hill, N. J. So I arranged everything the night before, and laid down to sleep in blissful anticipation of greatsport on the morrow. At 2 o'clock the alarm clock woke me up. I hurriedly dressed myself, took my basket and started. I reached Williamsburgh, where I was to take an East New York car, at 3's. I then discovered that the car would not leave until an hour later; so I took my breakfast and waited for the car. I reached East New York about 5's and was told that there would be no train to Canarsie for an hour. I began to be afraid that my friends would sail without me, but I waited for the train and waiked down to the pier, but could discover no sign of my friends. After waiting till 8 o'clock I saw them coming in a wagon in which they had ridden from Fistbush. I had wasted about three hours which I might have spent in sleep.

We got into the yacht, set sail, and began to get our lines ready for a tramendous catch of pleasing effects on a melodeon.

The pilot, having had his little joke, settled down to business and anchored the steamboat on the Fishing Banks an hour before high noon. Then what a busy time there was. Everybody had longings for clams. The fish were in the sea, but the friendly agency of the luring clam was needed. So clams were produced and impaled and wildly sown into the sea and the harvest anxiously awaited, Masamyhie the reporter became aware of a vast unharpiness on his inner side indicative of a poverty of food, assumption of the property ward. The surprise was saddening, for nothing could be found but agentleman of color flanked by a board on two kegs, whereon reposed some cruliors, five pieces of pie, and some butter. The sense of utter misery was so great that the reporter lost nil account of his movements till he stood abaft the wheel, when he became consolous that his eyes were fixed with great intensity on a bottle of prunes in the backet of an amateur fishing party. They were eating black bread, sausages, mustard, and piekies. The head of the party was very large and red, but he had a charming grace, for he cut a slice of prunes in the backet of an amateur fishing party. When the lonesome ness of this mode "shink mass explained to him if followed to e. cess. he carefully tied *p* ut twelve feet of the next line about the rail: *a. and began again. Except narrowly escaping from killing the blue-eyed griv with the sinker at the next throw, the ambiguous relative did nothing to distinguish himself for some time. Meanwhile the consumption of food went bravely on, under the superintendence of the reporter's corpulent acquaintence.

Fishing. The said. "Inkes brains. Now, you see, I reason over the matter. I say there are five hundred hooks in the water around this steamer, and it's only by blind lusk that a lish runs on one of them, so I drop my line and begin to eat-which is, after all, the chief pleasure of fishing. Reeping my eye on the line meanwhile. If the line thathens I land my lish. If it don't I still keep on eating.

He emphasized the remark by opening a box of sardines. The ambiguous relative was here informed that coat pockets were not good pleaces to keep claims in, as it was heating to the claims. He explained that he had put them there mechanically, and withdrew them.

Now you look along this boat rail," the copulent man continued. "and you see fishers of every age, from eighty years to ten, with the same expression on every face. What is it? It's the desire to excel by lines. It's gambling.

The sentence was never finished because the reporter was struck on the side of the face by a lively flounder, and his idoas in all directions, while the ambiguous relative yelled. Hooray! Twe caught a striped hass?

Young man," it was remarked in an injured tone. "I have been conscious of your violent agilation for some time past, but supposed it was merely claims. It appears, however, that it's flounders. I don't feel that I am justified in siaving above deed while you are struggling with flounders, and will therefore retire to the boiler room."

To this the host strongly objected, and the matter was finally adjusted by sending the am.
